People Power: Models that are changing communities and cities

Kurt Iveson from Sydney Uni will explore examples of different ways in which different communities around the world bring about change.

What can we learn from what is happening elsewhere? And how can our communities have a greater say over what happens to them?

His research with Amanda Tattersall identifies five models which they call playing the game, mobilising, organising, prefiguring and parties. As Kurt presents, we will consider the utility of each model within our local context.

This session will be of value for tenants as well as activists, NGOs and political party members - basically anyone interested in change.
